Love 3 Sevalaya's News Letter - November 2008 Serve 8 Price-Re.1

Dear Friends,

This year Diwali in India was a 'less colourful' festival, as many were struggling to accept the losses in the share market. The global economic melt down had its impact on the festive mood of the people. Many known friends in USA and Europe had lost jobs or were worried about losing their jobs. Many in Indian IT sector were also worried about loss of jobs or about the cut in their pay packets. All this added to the gloomy picture and Diwali was not what it was in the previous years.

True to this impact of global economic melt down, Sevalaya also faced problems. Donations were hard to come and it was a big struggle to get all that was required to celebrate Diwali for a big family of 1060 people. It was hard work for all our staff members who worked round the clock for the past two months to mobilize all the support needed and finally we made it – in spite of the problems outside, all the 1000 children got new dresses and the 60 grand pas and grand mas got their saris and dhotis. As usual there were many visitors during the Diwali weekend and they brought some sweets and crackers with them. We thank all the donors, who, in spite of so many uncertainties and upheavals in the market place, still managed to contribute their mite for the benefit of orphan and destitute children and senior citizens.

To keep in line with all the global warming campaign we did during the year, we had told our children that we will reduce on firing crackers this year. So we reduced our expense on crackers. We have also started using the dead wood available around the campus as fuel for at least two days in a week to reduce expenses on the fuel cost. Also we are trying to grow more vegetables in-house, to reduce purchases. Only more production is going to help us tide over this crisis.

It is understandable that people, when they want to cut down on expenses, will first cut down the donations they give. On the other hand inflation in India has made the cost of living very high, to organizations as well. So our expenses have gone up and income has come down. The 'think tank' in Sevalaya is working on cost reduction and increasing income generation.

We get news from all over the globe that people are losing money and because of that losing heart and some of them are killing themselves. In the final analysis, what is required for all of us is food, shelter and clothing. I am sure that many, who have lost hope, are very much above this level. It is just that we are not able to accept the inevitable change in life style, which monetary loss will bring in. The good old Indian concept of 'Simple living and high thinking' and Gandhiji's principle of 'Voluntary poverty' should guide us.

Thanks & Regards

Swami and (his Muslim) friends*

Those were the days when Swami Vivekananda was wandering in the Himalayas, along with Swami Akandananda. When they were almost nearing Almora, Swamiji felt totally exhausted and sat down on the road side. There was a Muslim Cemetery opposite to this spot. The care taker of the Cemetery, a Muslim fakir by name Zulfikar Ali saw this, and he rushed to help Swamiji. He brought with him a cucumber, the only eatable thing available with him and offered it to Swamiji. Swamiji said, "Please feed it in to my mouth. I am so tired." The fakir hesitated." Swami, but I am a Muslim." Swamiji smiled and said, "How does it matter? Are not all of us brothers?" The fakir obliged and swamiji felt refreshed after partaking of the cucumber. "The man really saved my life", he later said. When he returned from America with all glory as the famous Swami Vivekananda, he was taken in procession along the streets of Almora. The fakir was in the watching crowd. He did not recognize Swamiji, but the latter spotted him, recollected the event, and exchanged pleasantries with him. He was introduced to the accompanying people.

In Alwar in Rajasthan, Swami became friends with a Moulvi who was a teacher of Persian and Arabic in a High School. He used to discuss matters relating to spirituality and religion with him for hours on end. about Kuran, Swamiji said,"there is one thing very remarkable about the Kuran.Even to this day, it exists as it was found eleven hundred years ago.It retains its pristine purity and is free from interpolations." The moulvi sahib became most devoted to the Swamiji and had a great desire to invite Swamiji to his house and feed him. He offered that he would cook the food with Brahmin cooks in their own vessels, and serve it by Brahmins only. He will be satisfied with watching him partake of food at his house from a distance. Swamiji brushed aside all the suggestions and readily agree to take dinner at his house. He ate to his heart's content, and the Moulvi was overjoyed. This incident earned for Swamiji many more dinners at Muslim houses!

While in Mount Abu, Swamiji was staying in the bungalow of a Muslim Wakil and was enjoying his hospitality. Munshi Jaganmohan, private Secretary to the Maharaja of Kethri, visited Swamiji, and was perplexed to see the Hindu sannyasi cozily settled in a Muslim House. He point blank shot the question," Well, Swamiji, you are a Hindu monk. How is it that you are living with a Muslim? Your food may now and then be touched by a Muslim!" at this Swamiji flared up, and said," Sir, What do you mean? I am a sannyasi. I am above all your social conventions. I will even dine with a Bhangi. I am not afraid of God; for he sanctions it. I am not afraid of Shastras; for they allow it. But I am afraid of you people and your society. You know nothing about God and scriptures. I see Brahman everywhere, manifested even in the meanest creature. For me there is nothing like High and low.Shiva, Shiva!'

Jag Mohan for a moment was gazing in silence. He could appreciate the spirit of this Hindu monk with a difference. It is he who brought about the meeting of the Swamiji with Kethri Maharaja which later developed in to a historic relationship.
