Mahadev Desai - 36

(Source: "The Fire and the Rose" by Narayan Desai)

Mahadev gives a description of an interview with Gandhiji. Gandhiji was sitting in the terrace and writing. An old man was taken upstairs as soon as Gandhiji was free to see him.

The neatly dressed old man placed before Gandhiji ten neatly arranged wads of currency notes and said, "Tis is for the poorest and the most deserving. You know them better than anyone else."

Gandhiji: That is very good. But how many years savings does that mean?

"Many years. But I sent a hundred for the earthquake and a hundred to Assam; and in Allahabad- four years ago, I gave Rs 500/ for the peasants."

"Oh! Then tell me what was your salary and what is your pension and what were you?"

"I was a school master. When I retired after many years' service my salary was Rs 52/ per month. I got no pension, but I was given a gratuity of Rs 2700."

"And how long ago did you retire?"

"Five years ago."

"And how much do you spend on your own living?"

"Oh! My living! Hardly much."

"But still one has to live. Tell me how much?"

"A little dal roti does not cost much. I can do with Rs 10/ a month. I have no one to take care of. I used to have nephews whom I supported and educated but now I am free. I have also a Sanskrit school to which I devote most of my time now. It is a free school." great thing. How I wish everyone could learn that art from you."

"So you saved a few thousands out of your small salary and have been donating it to the service of the poor."

"Yes Mahatmaji, I have spent very little on myself and I have often been able to give away what I had to the poor."

Admiring his patched clothes which did not need to be supplemented by shawls or blankets Gandhiji asked, "And where did you get this Khadi?"

"It is home -made khadi."

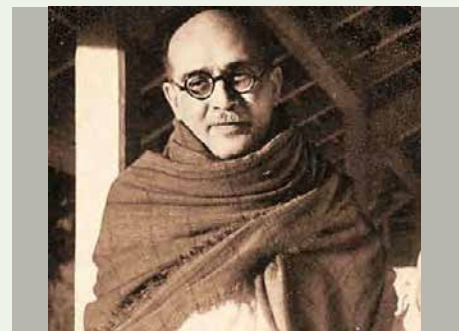

"You make me envy you."

"I have still some savings left Mahatmaji" said the old man his face suffused with the joy of giving.

"I shall bring all that some other time. I do not know where to give the money. I know you, and you know the poorest who deserve help."

"I am deeply thankful."
